Dear Leo:

Thank you very much for your thoughtfulness in sending along your note of 9 July. I certainly had no problems with the "Mr. Colby" and actually took no notice of it. I am moved and appreciative, however, that you were so sensitive as to write again about it.

On the basic letter, please let me thank you for your positive comments about our product. From a critic as qualified as you, this is high praise indeed. The problem of stimulating an appreciation of the quality of our output by our customers, however, is one that has long troubled us. Part of the difficulty, I suspect, lies in the necessity that we classify our material, which slows down its dissemination and handicaps it in competition with the output of the normal commercial press. Another aspect of the problem, of course, is the competitive bureaucratic arena to which you refer. This involves separating our analytical product from a feeling of bureaucratic competition with our reporters. The real answer, of course, is education of our customers, plus an extension of the "Community" concept so that all our efforts are understood as a common effort rather than competing ones.

Thanks again for both letters. You have been a great stimulator and supporter of efforts to improve economic intelligence, and I look forward to more of your ideas in the future.

Sincerely,

W. E. Colby

Dear Bill:

Because I thought the letter to you should be marked Confidential, it was necessary to take it to the Post Office for Registration. In the rush to accomplish that, I did not notice that I addressed you as Mr. Colby. At any other time this would be of no moment, but I am especially loath now for anything to suggest a distance I do not intend. Quite the contrary.

Warm regards,

Sincerely,

Leo Cherne
